Real Hobbies of the Folks Who Make the Reel Hobbies for Other Folks

Tom Ince is quoted in a recent motion picture magazine as saying that the photoplay business has sone forward faster than any industry in the world, and he specifically mentioned the automobile as one of the industries that had been distanced. If Mr. Ince had been questioned further he might also have said it was not the fault of the stars of the motion picture that the automobile industry had been distanced by the pictures.

There is probably no class of people in the country which has larger part of its capital invested in automobiles than the motion picture actors. There is hardly a star who hasn't a machine that has individual characteristics. Those stars who don't like to go in for motors on the wholesaie, like William Farnum, for instance, who counts his cars by the flock, have then, especially prepared for them. And if some star gets one that seems to be particularly comfortable, his or her associates immediately try to get the same kind and improve a bit on the original design. Likewise, when the press agent learns of it the cars take on well it is never thought of by their qualities never thought of by their
